

How to Best Learn the Key Words to the References Using Mnemonics

The Ten Commandments

I want to help students keep The Ten Commandments by not killing someone when making their Exodus from school. In school zones, you should drive 20 miles an hour. But that is faster than driving 3-17 miles an hour.

- The first trick is to get something in the key words to trigger an idea or image in your students' minds. Notice that with the key words at the top of each mnemonic, there is a word or two that is underlined. This is probably going to be the trigger that will help them remember the mnemonic, that then will help them remember the reference.
- It is best to spotlight and try to learn one Scripture Mastery scripture a week. Many teachers print up the particular mnemonic on a 8.5 by 11 sheet here and place it up on the chalk board or a bulletin board as a reminder and reference for that week.
- Never let students tell each other the reference or page number when scripture chasing. They won't be able to in real life or during a competition, so better to learn that now. After you have taught one of the mnemonics, then with scripture chasing, after your say some key words, give a hint from the mnemonic. So after you say, "The Ten Commandments" You could say something like, "Isn't one of the worst ways to break them is by accidentally killing someone when making your exodus from school? How fast should you be going? Three to 17 miles an hour would be too slow." If you consistently give these kind of hints, they will soon learn the connections and you will not need to use hints at all.
